

By BikeRadar

With their compact bodies, double-sided entry and free float, Speedplay's pedals are different from most others. They feel a little odd at first, with no spring tension centring your feet, but they offer great freedom to find your own natural position for pedalling.

With their tiny lollipop design they offer plenty of cornering clearance and the dual-sided set-up is one of the easiest to get into by just locating the pedal and clomping down.

While the pedals are light at 208g, the 70x45mm cleats are bigger and heavier than most, but they provide a good platform to deliver power with no hot spots. On the downside they're cumbersome and hard to walk in.

Replacement cleats are expensive too, but it's worth remembering that they will last longer than most.

With just 11.5mm of stack height the Zeros are super efficient and come with adjustable float and release angle so you can dial them in to your requirements.

