Sock firm DeFeet's Un-D-Shurt is made from an in-house Micro Supreme fibre, which is an acrylic mixed with polyester. It has a slight pile and mesh weave to help wicking and create more surface area for moisture to evaporate.

This material isn't durable and after only a couple of rides there were quite a few pulled threads. It's also less tolerant to machine washing than other base layers, having to be washed cold.

The vest is a roadie cut and tapers down the body. It's long at the back so there's plenty to tuck in and keep the draughts out on a chilly day. It wicks well, feels pretty silky to the touch and fits really well. As a vest for race use this is definitely one we'd recommend.
